This proposal is for a follow-up of children who were reared in two large urban child welfare centers in New York State during the period 1977-79. In response to the needs assessment of their own families, the institutions (up to 3,500 children at any given time) provided services such as food, clothing, shelter, educational and medical services to prevent placement into foster homes. These children were interviewed in the houses they lived in with their parents. Compared to 1,337 children who lived with their parents in their same community and were not enrolled in the centers, the children in the centers had a longer duration of contact with their parents (14.0 months vs 10.9), were more likely to be re-referred to the institutions (29.6% vs 15.8%), and were more likely to have had non-resident kin in their homes (71.6% vs. 65.5%). This research seeks to continue the comprehensive assessments of the children (mothers, fathers, siblings, teachers) made as they were leaving the centers. In addition, the children who were identified as at risk during the course of the center care will be followed until age 18. These two groups of children will provide different information on the processes that produce an engaged, cohesive family and one that is dysfunctional in the midst of other, pressing problems. Thus, the study can be described as 'by-and-large' as well as 'by-product' of the child welfare system. This project will focus on the parents who fostered children in the centers. We will follow these families as they secure custody of their biological children and adopt these children. Some of the first parent of the child who went into the child welfare system as an infant, is the last child to be returned to their family by the State. An overview will include a description of home situations (e.g., domestic violence, substance abuse), progress toward an independent life, and living arrangements. Our sample will include the foster families of the children who were in the centers for 12 months or longer. In addition, we will also follow the children who were reared in the centers for 3 or 4 months. This groups are both those who were returned to their homes as they adjusted to the institution and those who were transferred to social service agencies. This group will be followed until the end of 2nd grade. Transitional plans, parental work histories, social support in the transition and job history will be assessed. Two additional groups will be followed: parents and children

Q: PHP/MYSQL Insert with time interval and select from database Hello all I have a problem to insert data into database with time interval. I am using the below code but it isn't working. I want to update the values in columns which are threated as auto_increment. $query = "INSERT INTO clientes (nombre, correo, apellidos, direccion, numero, email, mensaje, fecha) VALUES ('$nombre', '$correo', '$apellidos', '$direccion', '$numero', '$email', '$mensaje', '$fecha')"; $datos = mysql_query($query, $conexion); if(!$datos){ die('Error al ingresar'); } I am using the below code to get the data from another table "ajax" with time interval. $query = "SELECT nombre, correo, apellidos, direccion, numero, email, mensaje, fecha FROM ajax WHERE fecha = NOW() - INTERVAL 1 MINUTE"; The data retrieved from the table "ajax" is sent to this php file and this query is created using the data. I want to update the data into database using the last data received from table "ajax". The error that I receive is the one that I already showed you and I get from the if-statement. Thanks in advance for all you help. A: INSERT [LOW_PRIORITY] [QUICK] [IGNORE] [INTO] tbl_name [(col_name,...)] VALUES (val,...); INSERT QUICK is very useful when you want to insert a batch of values. If you use this in your case, you don't need to select rows you wish to insert. SELECT... WHERE fecha = NOW() - INTERVAL 1 MINUTE Hope it helps you. EDIT: For example: mysql_query("INSERT INTO table (col1, col2) VALUES ('a','b')"); mysql_query
